On a recent visit in Paris we called at the Convent of the Visitation now under the charge of Mother Gonzage, who, for a number of years, managed so successfully the affairs of the convent in this city. By the courtesy of Mother Gonzag we were shown through the entire grounds of the convent and on every hand beheld evidences of the thrift, care and industry that characterizes the institution. The sisters have twenty-four acres of ground just at the edge of Paris, and the ground is slightly higher than Paris, giving a commanding view of the entire city. A spacious lawn, with trees and evergreens cattered over it, leads up to the buildings. These are not, as yet, particularly large, but are arranged with an eye to the convenience and comfort of the pupils of the school and possess every requisite of a first-class institution, The garden was a picture of neitness and all the vegetables found a welcome in its ample beds. A hend of fine cows that grazed a rich pasture adjoining keeps the convent supplied with the choicest products of the dairy. Mother Gonzaga who has such a well earned reputation as an educator, with eleven Sisters attend to the institution and they have under their charge a large and growing achool of young ladies. A lovelier spot could not be selected, and 'so sweet and quiet is the whole place that one could hardly wonder that the Sisters should prefer its holy rest to the bustle and struggles of the world.
